

Rick Young Invitation Document.

Please share your documents and write your report here.

Ron's Response and Reflection - Google Docs

Rick,

Thanks for inviting me to share in the production of a Google Doc. This 2.0 tool seems like a great way to have teachers and students create, store, and share documents. What a great way to facilitate collaboration! Apparently, Google Docs allows users to create new documents as well as upload existing ones--including presentations. In the past, if I needed to access files, I would email them to one of my email addresses (if work related, my Catoosa County mail server) and then pull them up from where ever I needed them. Google Docs will help me out with this, plus I can share easily!! I just worked with 16 of my colleagues on a project in which we collaborated information about our implementation of an ePortfolio project.....if we would have only used Google Docs...

So with this tool, we can decide with whom we share, we can store online, access anywhere, peer edit, and determine/evaluate who has contributed by looking at the revisions history. I like it!!

Take care,

Ron